Laura Whiting

The Shape mentoring project came at a really important time for me. During the pandemic I thought a lot about what values were important and how I want to practice. The mentoring gave me time to clarify these, and the confidence to make stronger decisions going forward.

Being connected to a cohort of other professionals was really supportive too. For those who have taken an untraditional route in their careers – or are still working this out – the process was made a whole lot less isolating being surrounded by supportive, encouraging and imaginative people. I'll certainly keep connected to the BBU network, and I see it as crucial to building solidarity between underrepresented practitioners.
